Plymouth Music Zone to drum up business to secure its future.

The region's biggest music education charity will be teaching Plymouth's top businessmen and women a lesson...

They don't know it yet but 100 people attending a Chamber of Commerce networking lunch are to be given a real taste of what Plymouth Music Zone has to offer. The city slickers will be swapping their ties for tambourines and beating drums not competitors. The Chamber of Commerce may be the so called "voice of business", but can they really sing?!

But there's also a serious note to the silliness. The Music Zone is hoping to attract local businesses to use the facilities and team building services available at its unique music education centre in Devonport. Money from potential corporate clients would then be channelled into securing the activities already on offer to 5000 children throughout the city.

The Project Director, Mark Trewin, can't wait to see what happens, "It's quite possible they'll choke on their chilli at the shock of an impromptu workshop and a load of African Drums. But we sponsored this lunch to show businesses what's really possible at the Music Zone and how music activities could benefit their organisations. Most importantly, we want them to know that every penny spent would not only help themselves but the children who depend on the opportunities the Music Zone strives to provide. Now, surely that's worth banging on about!"

If you want to witness the spectacle, photographs and filming opportunities are available by prior arrangement. Please contact Glyn Fuge or Debbie Geraghty for further details on 01752 213690.
